Ambition Talk No. 3

THERE are some clerical positions that honest men can't hold.

The honest man can't be a gambler's assistant, a swindler's confidential agent or the private secretary of a corrupt politician, for he will be required, in any one of these positions, to use his talent in furthering a dishonest enterprise.

But, in the main, when a discharged employe of an ordinary mercantile house turns up with a cock and bull story about being discharged because he was unwilling to do dishonest things, it's a wise thing to begin to look around for the limburger. There's something rotten elsewhere.

When a clerk is conspicuously successful in his work; when he goes at it like the left halfback making a tackle in an open field; when he comes into the office and leaps to his desk like a Bengal tiger; when his eyes sparkle and his face lights up with joy at a new piece of work, why, bless you, the most dishonest employer outside of the penitentiary won't fire him for being square. He will find some other employe to do the dirty work.

Any good business man knows that the man who will steal for him will steal from him; and even dishonest men, who keep such human offal about, are mighty careful to select men of the other sort for places of high responsibility in their employ.

A thief can sometimes get employment from a thief—but not in any important capacity.

Of course there are exceptions, but in the main, sterling honesty does not cause men to lose their positions. Once show your employer that you are surprisingly and remarkably successful in your work, and a rival firm can't pry you loose from your job with a board, unless you prefer to leave it.

AUTOMOBILING

Carrying tents, cots, an alcohol stove, cooking utensils—everything essential to the making of comfortable camps two Cleveland (Ohio) women had the unique experience, last summer, of living for five weeks in the open air. By day they traveled in their Cadillac car; by night they slept in their snug camp under the stars. They covered 2,400 miles during the five weeks and visited the principal points of interest in New York state and New England.

Dr. Lillian G. Towslee and Miss Katharine Arthur were the women. They had a chauffeur, of course, to drive the machine and do the heavy work in pitching and breaking camp; and Dr. Towslee's eight-year-old son was along, too.

For five weeks the party practically lived in the car, packing and unpacking their camping equipment each morning and night, and moving on over another lap of the journey. An average of seventy-five miles travel per day satisfied the members of the party, who were not out to break any touring records; although one day they made 151 miles. In spite of the fact that the route took the car through or over five mountain ranges—Adirondacks, White Mountains, Green Mountains, Berkshires and Catskills—and the further fact that the load carried was 1,600 pounds, the entire trip of 2,400 miles was made on 127 gallons of gasoline.

Dr. Towslee and her party were delighted with the trip. Automobile touring was not a new experience, but camping out of doors was, and they enjoyed it. Not one night out of the entire five weeks was spent under a roof, other than the tent roof. "There is no better sport in the world," said Dr. Towslee, "than touring in an automobile and eating and sleeping in the open air. We traveled slowly and saw the best of the beauties of the northeast; and we enjoyed every minute of the trip. My advice to summer tourists is to eat and sleep out of doors just for the fun there is in it and for the novelty of the experience."
